

MENTORING FOR ENGINEERING LEADERS

Mentoring for your engineering leaders.

How I work and how I help. For CTOs and People teams who sponsor a leader.

THE PROBLEM

Your best engineer got promoted. Now they learn the job by breaking things.

A mis-hire. A senior who quits in a 1:1. A roadmap that slips for the third quarter. Most new managers meet each of these alone, and the company pays for the lesson.

A course teaches the theory. On Tuesday at 4pm the leader needs someone who has made the same call before and can say what happened next.

CTO, founder

Staff engineer taking the leadership step

Product Manager, product leader

Most of them are sponsored by their company. Their companies:

How it works.

1

Intro call

30 minutes, free. You, the leader and me. We agree the two goals for the quarter.

2

A fixed slot

60 minutes every two weeks. The leader brings the live problem, we leave with a decision and the next step.

3

Checkpoint after session 3

Are the two goals moving? If not, we change the plan, not the goals.

4

Closing review

End of quarter, with the leader. You get the themes, never the transcript. What is said in the room stays in the room.

5

Renew or stop

Quarter by quarter. No annual contract.

What we work on.

The list comes from real sessions. The words in quotes are from mentees.

- The first 12 months as a manager
- Scaling the org: team splits, structure, 8 to 80
- Delivery, estimates and team performance
- Leading an org where AI agents do a share of the work
- EM to Director: leading through managers
- Hiring, mis-hires and hard people calls
- Executive presence and managing upward
- Founder and CTO sparring: roadmap, board, strategy

“layoffs and hiring, performance reviews, communication with CxO levels, scaling and consistency”

DAVID JERABEK, CHAPTER LEAD, ROHLIK

“product-engineering cooperation, career framework, team alignment, and agility”

MAREK TRUNKÁT, CTO, APIFY

Still in the seat.

The advice comes from this year's board meetings, not from a book.

- Scaled Mews engineering from 35 to 100 people through Series C.
- Led engineering at Manta, acquired by IBM.
- 3+ years at Databricks in the Bay Area.
- Advisory board at Trinity Bank. Product and tech committee at Eurowag.
- Founder of the Engineering Leaders Community, 3,300+ members, since 2019.
- Lecturer and guarantor of the IT Leadership MBA at VŠE Prague.
- 14 mentees in parallel, no more. The pattern-matching across all of them is what you pay for.

What CEOs and CTOs say.

“Marian was part of helping scale up our technical teams from 35 to 100 people during his time with Mews. One of his key successes was around creating visibility on engineering output and ensuring we were able to more effectively reach our goals.”

Matthijs Welle
CEO, Mews

MEWS

“Marian helped me to stabilize and mature our engineering in Apify after a period of growth. In mentoring, we focused on many areas across product-engineering cooperation, career framework, team alignment, and agility. But mainly, he changed how I view my role and the role of the engineering department in the organization.”

Marek Trunkát
CTO, Apify

 APIFY

What their leaders say.

“Marian was my mentor for 3 months and I've learned a lot from him — communication with my own team and stakeholders, managing improvement plans, hiring, and overall team stabilisation. Marian has experience from multiple scale-up companies, growing from 30 to 100+ people. What I appreciated a lot is directness and honesty in mentoring, challenging my own beliefs of what is possible and at the same time being very human oriented.”

Oleg Smirsky

Head of SW Development, Česká spořitelna

“Marian has been mentoring me for a year and a half. What I appreciate the most is that no matter what topic I bring up, Marian always has practical and actionable advice. We've covered layoffs and hiring, performance reviews, communication with CxO levels, scaling and consistency. In my new role, after just four months, I had to let go of a significant number of people who were also my friends. Marian provided invaluable guidance on how to approach this difficult task. I was able to part ways with everyone on good terms.”
